SHIPPING NEWS

Kaanapali Harbor's Historical Bark.

To sea-faring men and especially deep sea sailors there are ships born, or more technically speaking built which are destined to "go on the even tenor of their ways" silent but active, earning a goodly sum for their owners, and then there are others who must have been born or launched on an unlucky day, that is if their record of misbehavior counts.

Riding at anchor at Kaanapali is a trim little iron bark known as the Abbie Palmer, discharging her cargo of coal. To look at her one would not see any thing out of the ordinary.

To the "land lubber" she looks the same as any other iron built bark, yet this same vessel has a history which possibly few on Maui know.

She was British built and for years earned for her owners a gratifying sum.

That troubles never came singly "but in couplets of three" is exemplified by this bark. About fourteen years ago she turned turtle" in the harbor of San Francisco, but was eventually raised and given an American register. Some twelve months later she was run down by one of the Empress line of steamers plying between Victoria and the Orient, and again repaired, but after another twelve months had elapsed was dismantled in a storm and had to be towed in to Seattle.

As she appears to be fit for many a good year's toil and staunch enough to combat with the vagaries of the seas it is to be hoped that with the completion of the couplet of misfortunes she will hence forth conduct herself as all well behaved, well named and mastered ships should.
